Conclusion	117
As we have observed, pastors who fail morally seldom saw themselves as candidates for it. Studies reveal that certain behaviors predispose pastors to moral failure. Wisdom suggests that we should become intimately familiar with these predictors and realize that pastors, and their families, are not above the benefit of qualified counselors and peer mentors. In our next chapter we will find that the growing trend of diminishing church attendance also impacts pastoral longevity. Indeed, the statistics and moral trends are alarming. In response, pastors and church leaders must design churches that not only model biblical fidelity but also target the spiritual, social, and relationship needs of an increasingly fractured society.....
